ABSTRACT

A deposit collection of library materials in a familiar place may be the only way disadvantaged adults will learn that the public library has something for them. Many libraries have used deposit collections successfully in serving this group by placing them in classrooms, in bookmobiles, in crossroads stores, in private homes, in clinic waiting rooms and other agencies. The library staff members who prepare deposit collections must know the needs and interests of the people they are serving. Each collection should be tailored to the location in which it is placed, suiting the needs of those who will encounter it there. Steps in creating deposit collections include determining appropriate locations within the community, obtaining the proprietors' cooperation, compiling and displaying the collection, and collection maintenance. Depending on the type of deposit collection and its location, costs can vary from about $5 to $50 per collection. This pamphlet on building deposit collections, one of a series of guides for library services to disadvantaged adults, includes, as resource materials, a professional reading list, libraries to visit, and a list of topics of interest to disadvantaged adults. DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS OF LIBRARY MATERIALS

DEFINITION OF TERMS
Coping Skills—ability to use one's knowledge to act constructively in his own behalf. Deposit Collection—small group of books, pamphlets, records, pictures, tapes, games, magazines and newspapers placed in business establishments, school rooms, waiting rooms, correctional institutions, hospitals or other places to provide information and recreation to special groups. Disadvantaged Adults—a person 16 years of age or over who has not had the opportunity to attain economic and educational levels which permit him to cope with his environment; those with less than a high school education and/or whose family income is below the poverty level. Most disadvantaged adults have never been inside a library: they are often frightened by the imposing brick and glass structures and they think the library is only for middle class people; and they oftentimes lack the private and public transportation to get to libraries. They are not going to come into the library unless they learn about what it has to offer them through people they know and trust. A deposit collection of library materials in a familiar place may	WHO PREPARES DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS?	be the only way they will learn that the public library has something for them. Many libraries have used deposit collections successfully in serving disadvantaged adults by placing them in classrooms, on bookmobiles, in crossroads stores, in private homes, in waiting rooms of clinics and other agencies. The library staff members who prepare deposit collections must know the needs and interests of the disadvantaged adults they are serving. One way to determine what is needed is to take a copy of the AAEC's Life Coping Skills Categories with you when you go into the community and check off the categories of importance as you discuss permission to place the collections with proprietors and agencies. If the collection is to be placed in the lunchroom of a factory, it should be designed for the people who work there, just as one to be placed in an adult basic education classroom must contain materials especially selected for this group.
	WHY PROVIDE DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS?	Deposit collections may be the only way the library can reach some of the disadvantaged adults in the community. They do not go to libraries; they don't have much leisure time in the press of adult responsibilities; and they don't know what the library can do for them. The public library must go to the disadvantaged adults where they live, work, and congregate.

DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS OF LIBRARY MATERIALS

WHERE DO YOU PUT A DEPOSIT COLLECTION?	The library must explore the neighborhoods where disadvantaged adults live to find out: • the characteristics of the people to be served—such as age, income level, sex, and race or national origin. • the availability of adult basic education classes and other programs in the neighborhood which may need deposit collections to support their programs. • the businesses located in the area such as stores; the places where disadvantaged adults work; plus recreation centers, churches, laundromats, learning centers, community centers, hospitals, correctional facilities, or private homes. From this list of potential locations, you will eventually choose the ones where you will put your deposit collections.	WHAT ARE THE BENEFITS OF DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS?	record keeping. All arrangements and agreements must be made before the deposit collection can be placed. The deposit collection can provide a source of information to disadvantaged adults that they will get no other way. It may be their first introduction to the public library and to material that is of interest to them and at a level they can read. The users find out that the library does have something for them, that it is free, and that they don't have to go out of their own neighborhood to use it. Some users of deposit collection will become users of branch and main libraries.
WHEN ARE DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS PROVIDED?	After the library has decided where deposit collections might be placed and the best places to put them, contacts must be made with the agencies, organizations and businesses to obtain permission and make arrangements to install the collections. Some proprietors and agency representatives are reluctant to accept the collection for fear of being held responsible or becoming involved in	WHAT ARE THE PROBLEMS OF DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS?	Most libraries reporting on their experiences with deposit collections have had very positive results. Some have failed to persuade proprietors and correctional institution staffs to accept the collections; others have had materials disappear or equipment damaged, but these seem to be isolated incidents. Generally, the collections have been accepted with enthusiasm and used heavily. Losses have not been significant since many deposit collections are made up of paperback books and inexpensive pamphlets. The material does wear out but it is seldom stolen.

DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS OF LIBRARY MATERIALS

HOW DO YOU DO IT?	Some librarians do not favor deposit collections because they feel the users will think there is no more to the public library than the deposit collection. This impression can be corrected through publicity: a sign attached to the display, leaflets left with the display, newspaper announcements, word of mouth, and offers of tours of library facilities. Some seemingly obvious places, like grocery stores, may not work in your community because the adults have other concerns when they go there.		Step 3. Assemble the Deposit Collection. Step 4. Deliver Materials and Set Up Deposit Collections. Step 5. Maintenance of Deposit Collections.
HOW DO YOU DO IT?	Deposit collections of library materials are very important to the programs of adult learning centers. Community Action Centers, correctional institutions, hospitals, and adult basic education classes. The materials are used to enrich the curriculum, provide information on jobs, on medical and social security applications, and legal problems. Other deposit collections containing small dictionaries, almanacs, the Bible, sports stories, and magazines located in stores, barber shops, laundromats, and churches provide an important informational and recreational service to disadvantaged adults. There are five major steps in establishing deposit collections:		Step 1. Determine Where You Should Put Deposit Collections. URBAN AREA. If you are located in an urban area or a town, go to the neighborhoods where disadvantaged adults live and find out what businesses and agencies are there. Make a list of the types and their addresses; include churches and schools. Find out who the proprietors or contact persons are. Based on your resources and local constraints, decide • how many deposit collections you can afford • what kinds of materials will be needed by coping skill area (use the AAEC Life Coping Skills Categories and match the categories to the needs of disadvantaged adults in your community) • Decide where you will try to place the collections. Since you will probably not be able to place as many collections
	Step 1. Determine Where You Should Put Deposit Collections Step 2. Get Permission and Agreements from Proprietors and Contact Persons in Agencies

as you would like, choose the best places for serving disadvantaged adults. 1. Lunchrooms in the places where they work 2. Homerooms of the children of disadvantaged adults where home kits might be placed to be taken home. 3. Classrooms and learning centers of adult basic education students. 4. Waiting rooms of medical and social welfare agencies serving disadvantaged adults. 5. Correctional institutions, nursing homes, hospitals, and clinics 6. Housing projects for low income families 7. Grocery stores, barber and beauty shops, laundromats 8. Churches, recreation centers.		on topics of interest to rural families: crops, nearby job opportunities, child care, health and sanitation, home repair and maintenance, and stories for pre-school children which the parents can read to them. Based on your resources and local constraints: • Decide what you can afford to provide as deposit collections • Determine what kinds of materials will be needed by coping skills categories for the people you will be serving. What crops are grown in the area? Check with county extension agents to find out what pamphlets on raising particular kinds of crops may be useful to farmers raising them. • Decide where you will try to place deposit collections
RUR LIFE LINE. If you serve a rural area, you will need to know where the disadvantaged adults go for shopping needs, medical attention and other services, and what schools and places of employment are in the area. If you have bookmobile service, you can place special book deposits and home kits on it to provide service with pamphlets and paperbacks		1. Homerooms of children of disadvantaged adults who can take the materials home 2. Grocery stores, barber shops, pool halls 3. Churches and other places disadvantaged adults meet

4. Home kits to be distributed with "meals on wheels" or other food services 5. Private homes.		Step 3: Assemble the Deposit Collections.
Step 2: Get Permission and Agreements from Proprietors and Contact Persons in Agencies. You must contact the proprietors and agency personnel with your plans for deposit collections by: 1. Explaining the purpose of the deposit collection as an extension of the public library in its attempts to provide information to people who cannot afford to buy it for themselves. 2. Describing what the deposit collection will consist of in terms of recreational reading such as sports, quick reference such as dictionaries and almanacs; magazines; pamphlets on jobs, social security, drugs, family planning, or other topics. 3. Explaining that the responsibility for the collection is the library's and not that of the proprietor or agency. Let them know whether the material can be borrowed or is to be used on site, and what plans the library has for maintaining the deposit collection.		You will build deposit collections based on the needs and interests of the disadvantaged adults who will use them. You have determined this from: • Your knowledge of the community • Your conversations with the potential users • Your conversations with proprietors, employers and other social agency personnel where you will place the collections You have decided on exactly where you will place the collections based on: 1. The willingness of agencies and businesses to accept the collections 2. The approximate number of disadvantaged adults who congregate in that particular location 3. The resources you have available for deposit collection. Finally, you will select the materials for the deposit collections based on:

DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS OF LIBRARY MATERIALS

• Interests and needs of the disadvantaged adults to be served. Choose what they want to read. • Amount of space available for the collection. You may have space for only one rack or small bookcase. If you are planning to give away pamphlets or leaflets, you will want to have them available in many copies. • What racks or bookcases are available for displaying the materials. Classrooms may be able to provide a bookcase but the library may be expected to provide racks for deposit collections in businesses or other agencies. This cost must be considered before the locations for deposits are decided.		2. Collect the racks or bookcases for transporting to the sites. 3. Acquire boxes for shipment of materials. For deposit collections, used packing boxes are sufficient. If the library doesn't have any, grocery stores may be willing to provide some. For home kits, small boxes are needed. Boxes can be ordered from office suppliers or shoe boxes might be acquired from shoe stores. Prices of boxes vary with the quantity ordered. See the examples on the following page:
Step 4. Deliver Materials and Set Up Deposit Collections. You have selected the materials for each deposit and have decided where they will be located. Now you will need to acquire the racks or bookcases for displaying the material, if there is no furniture for this purpose at the location. Some steps to follow are: 1. Assemble the materials in one place and label each collection with the name and address of the location to which it is going.

DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS OF LIBRARY MATERIALS

	1. Transport the materials by station wagon, or truck depending upon the quantity, the size of racks or other equipment. The library staff will have to transport the materials and set up the displays. Step 5. Maintenance of Deposit Collections. You cannot install a deposit collection and then forget about it. The library usually will have to maintain these collections. You should be prepared to do this and you should have reached an understanding on how and when it will be done with your staff before and when you obtain agreements with the proprietors and agencies to place the collections in their businesses. Some steps to follow in maintenance include: 1. Regularly scheduled visits to check on the condition of the materials. Since paperbacks and pamphlets wear out quickly, you must be sure the worn and lost items are replaced. The display always should be attractive and the materials clean and new. The host of the collection should feel free to call you about needs or problems. 2. Finding out what materials are being used. If you discover that some items are not being used, you should		replace them with more popular ones. Also, you will want to ask the users and the proprietors or agency representatives what other topics they think would be of interest and then choose new materials based on these suggestions. 3. Removing out-of-date newspapers and magazines. An up-to-date deposit collection shows that the library is seriously interested in providing this service. Also, the attractiveness of the materials appeals to the users and to proprietors who do not want their places of business cluttered with shabby, worn-out newspapers and paperbacks. 4. Providing instructions for borrowing material such as a leaflet, with directions to sign a card and leave it on the rack or bookcase, and where to return the material. Some libraries encourage returning of material at a branch library and, in this way, introduce the user to the branch. 5. You may decide not to keep formal circulation data but rather let your users return a book when they take another.
		HOW MUCH DOES IT COST?	Costs of Deposit Collections Costs depend upon the type of deposit collection used:

DEPOSIT COLLECTIONS OF LIBRARY MATERIALS

	1. Classroom deposits--generally these collections are made up of books, pamphlets, magazines, newspapers, records, games, films and filmstrips from the library's general collections. They are rotated and restocked based on student interests and needs. These collections of special materials for disadvantaged adults will be included in the library's budget. Approximate Cost: about $50 per collection 2. Paperback and pamphlet collection--these collections would be located in laundromats, reading rooms, beauty shops, waiting rooms and other places of business. The materials used for such collections will be worn out through use. The pamphlets probably will be given away. Most of this material will be free or inexpensive. Approximate Cost: about $15 per collection 3. Small collections or home kits--home kits will include easy reading paperbacks and pamphlets for disadvantaged adults and some story books for pre-school children. The home kit should have family appeal and should contain leisure reading for adults and children plus pamphlets on daily life problems such as health, family planning, child rearing, nutrition, and budgeting.	WHAT OTHER LIBRARIES HAVE DONE	Home kits can be distributed by bookmobile, from the library or possibly through the home rooms of school students who can take them home to their parents. Approximate Cost: about $5 per kit Countless libraries across the country have used deposit collections successfully. The idea is not new: in the 1930's the Works Projects Administration (WPA) provided deposit collections of books and pamphlets in many counties with no information resources. During World War II, the War Information Centers were set up to provide survival information at the county level. The Tennessee Valley Authority's (TVA) educational program provided "book boxes" to construction camps. Recent efforts of public libraries to provide deposit collections for the use of disadvantaged adults include the following which have worked well: Brooklyn Public Library The now famous "3-B's" project placed deposits in bars, barbershops and beauty parlors in disadvantaged neighborhoods. The collections of paperback reference books were placed in popular neighborhood locations. The material was to be

The collections were made up of paperbacks, magazines, ready reference materials, and recreational reading. Included in the collections were books on jobs, literacy, and high school equivalency tests. Educational games for children were included. These were circulating collections. Newark (New Jersey) Public Library A deposit was placed in a tutoring center in a housing project and instruction provided on the use of books. Cleveland Public Library Classroom sets placed in adult basic education classes were very successful. The materials were new and up to date. Putnam County Adult Learning Center, Hurricane, West Virginia A rotating collection was placed at the Learning Center. The books were available to take home. The Community Action Program provided its bus to take Learning Center students to the public library.	The use of deposit collections by public libraries has become very popular all over the country. It is helpful to visit a library which has a successful program before you begin your program. Most

In all, the library provides services to 485 groups and organizations with whom it has written agreements covering the handling and maintenance of the materials. The library offers training to the staff of the agencies on how to provide library services to their clients. Enoch Pratt Free Library, Baltimore Deposit collections were set up in Community Action Centers to serve disadvantaged	WHERE TO GO TO VISIT

WHAT CAN YOU TRY?	large libraries have such programs. In your state you can find out where to go to visit by calling your state public library agency. They can help you choose a library of similar size and with user groups similar to yours. You can experiment with deposit collections to see how well they work in your community. In expanding your services to disadvantaged adults, pick a place to try out a deposit collection where disadvantaged adults congregate, such as waiting rooms in health and welfare agencies or low-income housing projects. An alternative to a regular deposit collection might be a rotating teachers collection. For a teacher's collection, the teacher comes to the library and selects books and materials to fit the needs of his or her class. You can help by pointing out special or new materials. The teacher then checks out the materials for as long as they will be needed, takes them to the adult classroom or learning center, and returns them to check out a new selection.
